

AgriChemical Litigation Team

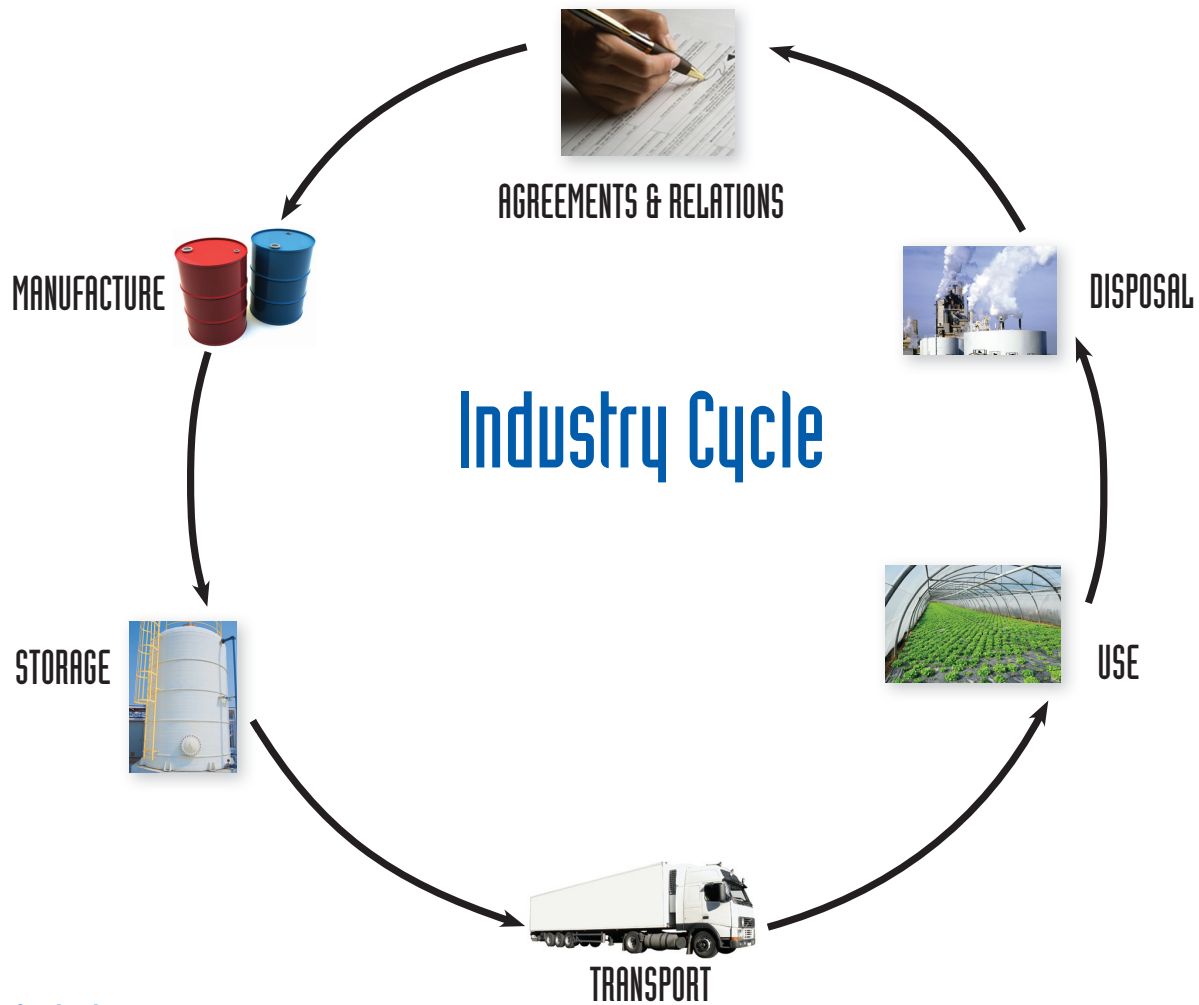

Agribusiness and agrichemical companies face an increasingly risky legal environment. Disputes are on the rise because of urban-sprawl, greater chemical use in home and garden, and mounting economic pressures within farm-based businesses in the United States. Also, due to recent rulings of the United States Supreme Court, disputes are more likely to go to trial. Companies within the agricultural industry are quickly becoming targets of a more educated and tenacious plaintiffs' bar.

Womble Carlyle's AgriChemical Litigation Team can defend your company against the complex litigation challenging the agribusiness and agrichemical industry.

Our Team has represented industry leaders throughout the South Atlantic region for decades and our attorneys have a proven record of success in agribusiness and agrichemical disputes in both federal and state courts. The AgriChemical Litigation Team's experience includes representing manufacturers and distributors of pesticides, herbicides, fungicides and fertilizers, in cases involving personal injury, property damage, crop damage, chemical storage, chemical efficacy, supply and distribution disputes and environmental impact claims. We have developed considerable expertise in crafting clear and persuasive trial strategies in a technical and complex regulatory landscape. We also excel in expert witness development, Daubert challenges, administrative litigation, arbitration and dispute resolution.

Regardless of where your dispute arises within the industry cycle, we understand the unique issues facing the agribusiness and agrichemical industry and provide you with innovative solutions. Womble Carlyle's AgriChemical Litigation Team has the experience and depth to successfully defend your company's interests and allow you to focus on growing your business, not fending off legal challenges.
